01 TRUTH TUESDAY

Mediation is not giving in.

Mediation is not giving in. It is a structured way to work through decisions your family will actually have to live with.

Depending on the circumstances, mediation can offer more control over the conversation, greater privacy, room for creative solutions, clearer parenting and financial plans, and a process built around real life.

The goal is not for one person to surrender. It is to create a focused setting for better conversations and workable next steps.

Save this for the conversation you have been avoiding.

Educational content only. Every family situation is different.

02 WEDNESDAY WISDOM

Three questions before a co-parenting conversation.

Before the next co-parenting conversation, pause and ask:

1. What does my child need this week?
2. Which decision needs an answer first?
3. What would make this easier to follow?

Specific questions can help keep the conversation practical, child focused, and easier to turn into a workable next step.

A useful conversation starts with a useful question.

Educational content only. Every family situation is different.

03 FAMILY FRIDAY

A parenting plan should work on a real Monday.

A parenting plan is most useful when it works on an ordinary Monday, not only when it looks complete on paper.

Before finalizing a plan, consider school nights, transportation, activities and appointments, holidays and breaks, expenses, and how changes will be communicated.

Clear details can reduce confusion and give children more consistency across two homes. Every family is different, and a plan should reflect the schedules and needs of the people who will use it.

The best plan is clear enough to use when life gets busy.
