FIX FIRST

Host bot challenge (siteground) intercepts every identity tested, including a plain browser Crawlers that do not run JavaScript never get past a meta-refresh challenge. Confirm in the host's bot-protection settings which AI crawlers are allowlisted, and check server logs for GPTBot, PerplexityBot and ClaudeBot hits and their status codes. Google Search Console is the authority for Googlebot.

  "browser": {
    "status": 202,
    "challenge": "siteground"
  "googlebot": {
    "status": 202,
    "challenge": "siteground"
  "gptbot": {
    "status": 202,

robots.txt does not mention any AI crawler

Add explicit user-agent groups for GPTBot, PerplexityBot, ClaudeBot and Google-Extended so the policy is a decision, not an accident.

FIX FIRST

Whether real AI crawlers can read the homepage cannot be determined from this network

Re-run from a second network, or read the host's bot-protection allowlist and server logs.

  "reason": "browser identity was challenged too; AI-crawler blocking and IP-level challenge are indistinguishable here"

Search Console: indexing status, rich-result types, crawl errors

Needs Search Console access. Until then this stays pending, not assumed.

What ChatGPT, Perplexity or AI Overviews say about the business

Human-run 20-question baseline on two named engines, recorded with date, engine, query and citations. Never scraped.

Referral traffic from AI surfaces

Needs analytics access.

What this does not do. It does not score, rank, or predict. It does not scrape any AI engine. What ChatGPT, Perplexity or AI Overviews actually say is observed by a person, twenty frozen questions on two named engines, recorded with date and citations, as the first step of the AI Search Readiness sprint. Anything marked pending stays pending until access exists.
