

WEDNESDAY WISDOM

THE DATE YOU SEPARATE CAN CHANGE THE FINANCIAL PICTURE

Pennsylvania can recognize separation even while spouses share a home.

- MARK THE MOMENT
Record the facts that show separate lives.
- SAVE THE STATEMENTS
Preserve financial records from the transition.
- GET ADVICE EARLY
Understand the property timeline before you negotiate.

Why the date of separation matters

Wednesday Wisdom

The date of separation can affect how Pennsylvania courts evaluate property, debt, and the financial timeline of a divorce. Spouses do not always need separate addresses. Intent and conduct can matter, so contemporaneous records may become important. A focused legal review can help identify the evidence that fits your circumstances.

TRUTH THURSDAY

CONFIDENTIAL DOES NOT MEAN CASUAL

Pennsylvania protects mediation communications, with specific exceptions.

- PROTECTED
Mediation communications and documents.
- ENFORCEABLE
A signed settlement may support enforcement.
- INDEPENDENT
Existing records do not become protected merely because they are discussed.

What mediation confidentiality really means

Truth Thursday

Pennsylvania law generally protects mediation communications from disclosure, but confidentiality has defined exceptions. A signed agreement may be used when enforcement is at issue, and evidence that existed independently does not become unavailable simply because it was discussed during mediation. Good preparation still matters.

Digital property belongs on the divorce checklist

Saturday Solutions

Digital property can include cryptocurrency, online businesses, payment accounts, rewards, domains, royalties, and other electronically stored value. An inventory should identify where an asset is held, who controls access, and what records can establish its history and value. Early organization can reduce gaps before negotiation begins.
