01 WEDNESDAY WISDOM

Five Back-to-School Details to Put in One Place

Back-to-school planning gets easier when the important details are not scattered across texts, emails, backpacks, and memory.

Create one shared place for the school calendar, transportation plans, activity schedules, emergency contacts, health information, and the supplies children need in each home. Then decide how updates will be communicated when something changes.

The goal is fewer last-minute surprises and less pressure on children to act as messengers. One reliable source of information can make the week easier to follow.

02 FAMILY FRIDAY

Help Children Carry Less Between Two Homes

Children should not have to manage the entire transition between two homes on their own.

When possible, keep everyday essentials in both places, use a short packing list for special items, and communicate schedule changes directly between adults. A familiar bedtime item, school supply, or morning routine can help each home feel settled.

The best system reduces pressure on children and makes transitions feel ordinary rather than overwhelming. Small acts of preparation can create a stronger sense of security.

03 TRUTH TUESDAY

Mediation Is a Process, Not a Promise

Mediation creates a structured setting for people to discuss decisions with the help of a neutral mediator. It does not guarantee that every issue will be resolved, and the mediator does not take either person's side.

The process can help organize the conversation, identify decisions that need attention, exchange information, and explore options. The people involved remain responsible for their decisions.

Whether mediation fits depends on the people, issues, and circumstances involved.

04 INTERVIEW PROMPTS

Five Questions About Choosing a Family-Law Process

FOR RACHAEL, BO, AND ALEKSANDRA KOCELKO

- 1 How can someone begin comparing mediation, collaboration, settlement conversations, and litigation?
- 2 What information is most useful to gather before an initial family-law consultation?
- 3 How does a neutral mediator's role differ from the role of each person's lawyer?
- 4 What practical issues may need to be addressed when parents build or revise a parenting plan?
- 5 What can families do to keep communication focused and reduce unnecessary cost or conflict?
